Message from the Executive Director

It been another tremendous year for the IDPC network, in an increasingly complex political environment where the space for civil society continues to shrink in the face of rising populism in many parts of the world. In these challenging times, IDPC’s core mandate of empowering and strengthening our network of civil society organisations in advocating for the reform of damaging drug policies and for the human rights of those affected is more critical than ever.

History has shown us that civil society that is empowered and informed is fundamental for fighting inequality, injustice and spearheading transformative social change. Civil society actors hold a mirror up to governments, reflecting back to them the real impact of policy decisions on people and communities. The watchdog role of civil society in being vigilant in policy formulation, implementation and evaluation cannot be underestimated if the interests of society’s most marginalised are to be central to decision making processes. The IDPC Secretariat remains deeply committed to our core mandate and will continue to work alongside our members and partners to fight for civil society space in drug policy forums at the national, regional and UN levels.

Reform-orientated civil society has made important strides in recent years and this success has been built upon increasing international solidarity, shared objectives, collaboration and networking. The drug policy reform movement, while still relatively young, has gained in strength, diversity, visibility and credibility – and the recent momentum of the 2016 UNGASS has been a major catalyst for this. There is now solid and fertile ground on which the movement can continue to grow. Drug policy reform is increasingly seen as one of the key social justice issues of our times and new actors from different disciplines and sectors are joining the calls for change.

One of the results of sustained advocacy is the increasingly fractious international drug policy debate in the lead up to the next major inflexion point in global drug control – the Ministerial Segment planned for March 2019, where governments will define the direction of the next phase of international drug policy. At the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the remnants of the so-called Vienna consensus have been difficult for member states to piece back together as they struggle to reach common positions on critical drug policy issues. The significant ground made during the 2016 UNGASS on human rights in particular has become anathema to several less progressive governments and there is significant push back. This poses challenges on the drug policy reform front to ensure that the gains made at the 2016 UNGASS are not reversed. Given this new reality, we convened our first ever ‘Civil Society Strategy Forum’ in Berlin last February that brought together 40 members from across the network to jointly plan and strategize ahead of 2019. This meeting’s key outcome is the IDPC Asks for the 2019 Ministerial Segment.

In the meantime, national reforms – both positive and negative – are happening at an ever-faster pace. While more jurisdictions are scaling up innovative harm reduction interventions, and are considering decriminalisation, allowing medicinal cannabis, and legally regulating cannabis for adult recreational use, others are scaling up draconian “war on drugs” approaches with devastating consequences. Extrajudicial killings have reached an alarming 27,000 in the Philippines, and disturbingly Bangladesh and Indonesia have started to follow suit. On the other side of the world, following recent elections, Colombia and Brazil are reverting back to severely punitive approaches towards drug cultivation, trafficking and use. In the United States, the number of overdose deaths reached a record 71,000 in 2017 and the political will to scale up harm reduction services in response is desperately lacking.

It is a mixed picture of both progress and regression in drug policy developments over the last year. In these uncertain times, IDPC’s role in promoting positive drug policy reforms, and providing a space for discussion, strategizing, support and collaboration for our members and partners remain pivotal. The Support. Don’t Punish campaign has become an invaluable tool for showing international solidarity for reform from across the spectrum of the drug market – people who use drugs, those in recovery, people who have been disproportionately sentenced for low-level and non-violent drug crimes, farmers of crops deemed illicit as well as advocates from diverse disciplines. The 2017 Global Day of Action was the largest yet, with hundreds of inspiring and creative events held across the globe towards changing the discourse around drugs from South Africa all the way to Japan, the UK, Colombia and Australia.

In these coming years, reform-orientated civil society effort must continue to ‘beat the drum,’ speak truth to power and leverage the growing international solidarity on this critical social justice and human rights issue.

For this year’s Progress Report, we have decided to switch to a new format, providing monthly highlights to showcase some of the most exciting and impactful advocacy events and activities from the IDPC membership. I hope you will enjoy reading it!

About us

The International Drug Policy Consortium (IDPC) is a global network of more than 170 NGOs that comes together to promote open debate on the effectiveness, direction and content of drug policies at the national and international level, and supports evidence-based policies that are effective in reducing drug-related harm.

We intervene at two levels in the decision-making process. Firstly, we facilitate networking and collaboration between civil society stakeholders, and seek to empower civil society and the most affected populations to better engage with and influence policy making processes. And secondly, we also engage directly in high-level policy making processes by providing analysis and expertise to governments and UN agencies on effective and more humane drug policy options.

Our goals

IDPC’s vision is that national and international drug policies are grounded in the principles of human rights and human security, social inclusion, public health, development and civil society engagement. To achieve this goal and inform our overall advocacy strategy, we have elaborated a theory of change which includes four strategic priorities:

- Priority 1: Engage with governments at national, regional and international level to influence drug policies
- Priority 2: Facilitate NGO communications and cooperation
- Priority 3: Build the capacity of NGOs to better engage in drug policy advocacy
- Priority 4: Produce high-quality multilingual drug policy resources.

Our policy principles

IDPC members agree to promote five core policy principles in our advocacy work with governments and international agencies. Drug policies should:

- be developed through an objective assessment of priorities and evidence
- be undertaken in full compliance with international human rights law
- focus on reducing the harmful consequences rather than the scale of drug use and markets
- promote the social inclusion of marginalised groups, and not focus on punitive measures towards them
- be developed and implemented based on open and constructive relationships with civil society.

More than the sum of its parts: IDPC’s Latin American network influences CICAD

Latin America remains the region with the highest representation in IDPC’s global network, with 39 member organisations. The dynamism of the drug policy debate in Latin America is reflected by a strongly engaged, credible and coordinated civil society, who continues to weather substantial obstacles whilst seeking new and innovative paths. The IDPC network provides a platform for regional members to exchange ideas, explore synergies and collectively tackle challenges in ways that maximise value for all involved. To do so, the network hosts quarterly regional calls, meetings at key events and a regional mailing list.

A key achievement of our networked efforts has been the progressive expansion of civil society participation at the regular sessions of the Inter-American Drug Abuse Control Commission (CICAD). A sub-committee of the Organisation of American States, CICAD is the Western hemisphere’s main multi-lateral drug policy forum. Until recently, the engagement of NGOs in this forum was mostly limited to informal parallel events held at the margins of the official proceedings of the meeting. The network’s concerted insistence in the importance of civil society participation, spearheaded by members such as Intercambios, MUCD, WOLA, ACEID, Dejusticia and Equis Justicia Para las Mujeres led to a breakthrough in November 2016, with the first official civil society dialogue at CICAD’s 60th regular session.

On 24-26 April 2017, at the 61st meeting of CICAD in Washington DC, a second dialogue was held with civil society on ‘Drug policy indicators: Measuring Progress with a focus on individuals’, and co-sponsored by MUCD and WOLA. Other network members, including the Drugs, Security and Democracy Program of the SSRC, Equis Justicia Para las Mujeres, and Intercambios contributed to an enriching and well-attended debate with government representatives on the need to consider indicators to measure the impact of drug policies on the health, safety, development and human rights of individuals and communities, taking into account a gender perspective.

While challenges remain in terms of engagement (e.g. civil society were not given an official mechanism to participate in the design of the new CICAD Plan of Action for 2016-2020), the consolidation of a civil society dialogue at the heart of CICAD’s regular sessions, as well as more civil-society-inclusive language in the latest hemispheric Plan of Action, exemplifies the power and potential of cooperation and concerted advocacy efforts at the regional level.

Solidarity to inspire courage and hope against the war on drugs

In early 2017, at the request of network members and allies in South East Asia, IDPC organised a regional civil society strategy consultation to discuss potential responses to stem the violent war on drugs in the Philippines and its negative influence in the region. The meeting was urgent, as Cambodia had just launched its own war on drugs and Indonesian drug enforcement officials were considering similar responses. Delegates from civil society, donors and UN experts (including the UN Special Rapporteur for extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, Agnès Callamard) discussed the need to counter the dehumanising narratives underpinning these crackdowns, and the potential of engaging regional and international policy processes to galvanise solidarity and pressure against human rights violations.

This strategic consultation set the foundations for ‘Drug issues, different perspectives’, the first drug policy forum of its kind organised by the University of the Philippines and the FLAG anti-death penalty taskforce in May 2017. IDPC’s Philippine member organisation, NoBox Transitions, supported the organisation of the forum and facilitated the dissemination of IDPC’s report A public health approach to drug use in Asia: principles and practices for decriminalisation to inform discussions.

In the same week, IDPC and the India HIV/AIDS Alliance organised a consultation of civil society stakeholders on potential priorities and actions to advocate for alternatives to the drug war. Participants agreed that awareness-raising and training on evidence-based understandings on drugs, drug use and harm reduction was needed amongst influential stakeholders in government and society – leading IDPC to develop a brand new Training Module seeking to break the myths about drugs and drug use (see below). Furthermore, the group identified gaps in knowledge regarding the imprisonment of people charged for drug offences and their treatment by the criminal justice system, an obstacle to advance advocacy efforts towards decriminalisation.

In an effort to contribute to closing this gap, IDPC has continued working on the issue of women, incarceration and drug policy in South East Asia. Implemented in collaboration with Ozone Foundation (Thailand), LBH Masyarakat (Indonesia) and NoBox Transitions (the Philippines), this project seeks to collect qualitative data on women imprisoned for drug offences in the region and, ultimately, develop joint advocacy actions to reduce detention, imprisonment and the application of the death penalty for low-level drug offences.

This is only a snapshot of the inspiring work being done by IDPC’s members in Asia. As the war on drugs continues to be waged in Asia, the IDPC network will continue to strengthen our ties to promote drug policies that reduce harms and protect the human rights of affected communities across the region.

Support. Don’t Punish’s record-breaking fifth birthday

The Support. Don’t Punish campaign is a unique global platform for grassroots-centred social mobilisation. Its continued expansion is a testament to the campaign’s galvanising role in advocating for harm reduction and drug policy reform. As the host of the campaign, IDPC has dedicated important efforts to nourish the campaign’s vast network of local partners and to ensure the success of this collective effort.

This year’s high point for the campaign was the celebration of its fifth Global Day of Action. On 26 June 2017, thousands of people across 205 cities in 93 countries took part in a broad range of innovative, diverse and vibrant actions, including concerts, large public protests, seminars and radio shows, street art, sports matches and meetings with policy makers. In the United Kingdom, students from the University of East London ran an information stand outside a busy shopping centre to inform the public about harmful drug policies and the ‘Rat Park’ experiments of the 1970s. In India, colleagues embarked on a 470-kilometre motorcycle outreach tour with photoshoots. In Paris, people who use drugs opened a mock ‘drug store’. In Mauritius, there was a silent protest in front of Parliament, and meetings with religious leaders.

In early 2017, Netchange conducted an evaluation of the campaign that provided valuable insights and recommendations to increase its reach and effectiveness. In response to these, we tweaked some internal processes, developed new tools and resources, and increased the organisation’s capacity to bring about improvements. Chief among the latter was the creation of a Campaigns & Communications Officer role, in charge of developing and coordinating the delivery of a revamped campaign.
strategy. Ensuring dedicated resource to the campaign within the IDPC Secretariat will bolster the campaign’s reach and visibility in the coming years.

We continue to explore new ways and collaborations to strengthen this worldwide movement and invite you to follow campaign developments through Facebook, Twitter and the campaign newsletter, and to communicate with us via e-mail and Slack.

Strengthening the foundations: IDPC’s governance review

IDPC’s Board of Directors is comprised of eight prominent individuals from all over the world with extensive experience in a broad range of issues of relevance to the work of IDPC; from criminal justice reform, to public health advocacy, community mobilisation and international diplomacy. The Board plays a fundamental role in the network’s governance structure and provides crucial support to the Executive Director. The Board is in constant dialogue with both the IDPC Secretariat, through quarterly meetings; and the membership at large, through the Members’ Advisory Council.

In July 2017, the Board held its annual face-to-face-meeting in Houston, United States. After six years of service to the Board, including as Chair of the Board in his final year, Ross Bell (New Zealand Drug Foundation) passed the leadership baton to Alison Holcomb (American Civil Liberties Union – ACLU) who is the current Chair. Donald MacPherson (Canadian Drug Policy Coalition) was elected to the position of Vice-Chair.

In July, the Board discussed progress against IDPC’s Strategy, the organisational finance and budget, and the work implemented by IDPC over the past year. Crucially, the Board also kick-started a governance review process to add clarity to the role and responsibilities of the Directors, to improve the Board’s effectiveness, to confer further stability to the network’s governance architecture, and to better highlight the critical role played by the membership in IDPC’s governance structure. This included a decision to rename IDPC’s Strategic Sub-Committee to the Members Advisory Council, and to expand the Council to three new seats for the Middle East/ North Africa, South Asia and Youth. This process continued throughout the year with consultations with the IDPC team and Board members, culminating in a dedicated Governance workshop in November 2017. The review process concluded the following year, with the approval of over a dozen revised or new foundational documents that will contribute to the network’s sustainability for the years to come.

August 2017

Strengthening capacities: IDPC’s drug policy ‘Train the trainers’ workshop in South Africa

A key element of IDPC’s strategy is to help build the capacity of advocates worldwide to promote drug policy reform. The challenge is that the existing demand from around the world far exceeds what the small IDPC Secretariat can deliver by ourselves. But beyond this issue, we are keen to support local advocates to develop their own workshops, to better respond to local needs and realities.
This is one of the main reasons why we have been actively exploring various 'Train the Trainers' models in recent years to empower drug policy reform leaders from various countries to deliver their own capacity building events in their country or region. Over the years, IDPC has developed a 'Drug Policy Advocacy Training Toolkit', which was designed as an open access and multi-lingual resource for all civil society partners to use. Our 'Train the Trainers' initiatives focus on explaining how to use and adapt the Toolkit, and provide practical advice and recommendations on how to organise a workshop on drug policy and harm reduction advocacy.

In August 2017, IDPC hosted a 'Train the Trainers' workshop in the margins of the excellent SA Drug Policy Week organised by the TB/HIV Care Association in Cape Town, South Africa. The workshop brought together 22 civil society participants from Ghana, Kenya, Liberia, Mauritius, Nigeria, Senegal, Sierra Leone, South Africa, Tanzania, Uganda and Zimbabwe – as well as representatives from the African Union. The workshop focused on the art of good facilitation, and how to deliver the Toolkit modules related to the current drug control system, harm reduction, effective drug policies, and civil society engagement. Participants got to deliver activities to the rest of the group throughout the two days, and the workshop feedback was overwhelmingly positive. Following the event, several participants reported that they had used the Training Toolkit themselves in subsequent events.

Based on the previous ‘Train the Trainers’ event held in Bali (Indonesia) in September 2016, this was the first time that IDPC had delivered such a workshop in Africa. It was followed-up in April 2018 with a dedicated workshop for Francophone African civil society in Dakar (Senegal), and we will continue to explore possibilities to roll-out further events across Africa to meet the needs of local civil society groups.

Breaking the myths about drugs and drug use

Following a regional civil society consultation in early 2017, a regional training workshop was held in Malaysia in September by IDPC, BABSEACLE (an IDPC member based in Chiangmai, Thailand, and promoting community legal education and pro bono legal assistance for vulnerable populations) and PBN4U (a network of legal service providers for people who use drugs). The event brought together participants mainly from Southeast Asia and sectors including legal service provision, human rights advocacy, community organisations and academia. The main objective of the workshop was to provide introductory training on topics such as drugs, drug use and dependence, harm reduction, decriminalisation and legal assistance for people who use drugs. To help mobilise and strengthen advocacy for humane and harm reduction alternatives to the Philippines war on drugs and its flow-on effects to other countries in the region, the majority of participants came from the Philippines, which enabled further strategizing for follow-up actions when they returned home.

A new module of our IDPC Training Toolkit for drug policy advocacy was prepared for this workshop, providing introductory training on evidence-based understanding about drugs and drug use. The module was delivered by two trainers from the Asian Network of People who Use Drugs. Cathy Alvarez, a previous trainee of IDPC and current regional coordinator for the 'Women, Incarceration and Drug Policy in Southeast Asia' project, delivered a session on the decriminalisation of drug use, based on another newly released training module: Decriminalisation and diversion in Asia. The workshop was held at the margins of the 6th Asia Pro Bono Conference.

Sharing his experience at the workshop, one of the participants said:

"From the perspective of a Philippine delegate, the workshop proceedings addressed two gaps that are found in the country's community-based drug rehabilitation movement – education and a unified understanding..."
Through collaboration and discussion, delegates gained a broader awareness of the current situation of the drug issue at both the local and international level. While the Philippines has dominated the international headlines, it is not the only country in the ASEAN region that is currently faced with similar challenges... Varying levels of expertise on the concepts of harm reduction made the workshop discussion engaging and informative. As a platform for candid discussion, the workshop promoted an atmosphere where delegates could attempt to reach a mutual understanding.

In addition, in a global context where drug use patterns are fast evolving, the event aimed to share best practice examples of innovative approaches to harm reduction for stimulant drug use. The event underscored the urgent need for harm reduction scale up and funding, and highlighted the importance of creating enabling environments for their deployment – including removing criminalisation and punishment of people who use drugs and addressing stigma and discrimination. The conclusions and key recommendations of the workshop were presented as an official contribution to the debates of the 61st Session of the UN Commission of Narcotic Drugs (CND).

Influencing Europe’s drug policies through the Civil Society Forum on Drugs

IDPC has been a member of the Civil Society Forum on Drugs (CSFD), an expert group of the European Commission, for over eight years. The CSFD which serves as the official NGO engagement mechanism in EU processes on drugs, and its membership – which is renewed every three years – includes 45 NGOs from different European countries and thematic focus. The last annual meeting of CSFD members for the period 2015-2018 was held in November 2017 in Brussels.

Over the past three years, IDPC has led a working group, within the CSFD, which aims to influence EU positions on drugs in international forums, including around the UNGASS and its follow-up. This has enabled the CSFD to directly feed into the statements and positions of the EU, especially in the post-UNGASS meetings, and during CND negotiations. Regular contacts with the European Commission and various EU Presidencies have also greatly consolidated the relationship between civil society and EU officials on drugs issues.

Each annual gathering of the CSFD includes a joint meeting with EU government officials involved in drugs issues via the Horizontal Working Party on Drugs (known as the HDG). With the negotiations starting on the 2019 Ministerial Segment on drugs, the IDPC-led working group had a key role to play in setting the tone and contents of the meeting.

The November meeting was a perfect opportunity to present the CSFD recommendations for the 2019 Ministerial Segment, highlighting the need for meaningful civil society and UN agency participation, and pushing for a strong focus on health, human rights and development. The issue of identifying better indicators by which to evaluate progress in global drug policy (see below) also featured high on the list of themes discussed with the HDG, and the CSFD was invited to attend the next HDG meeting of January 2018 to share its analysis of possible new ways of evaluating the impacts of global and European drug policies, in line with the UNGASS Outcome Document and the Sustainable Development Goals.

December 2017

Calling for better indicators to evaluate global drug policies

In the autumn of 2017, the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) kicked off the process of revising its main data collection tool on drugs – the Annual Report Questionnaire (ARQ). The ARQ is sent each year to governments worldwide to gather the information that is then used by the UNODC to produce its World Drug Reports. As part of the ARQ review process, the UNODC launched a call for online feedback by governments, UN agencies and civil society. Although IDPC sent some feedback through the online questionnaire, we also decided to send more detailed inputs to the UNODC in a letter signed by 177 NGOs. The letter called for more collaboration in data collection across all relevant UN agencies – especially those focusing on human rights, health and development issues – and for better civil society inclusion in the ARQ review process. The letter also offered detailed inputs on key themes and indicators that should be covered in the revised ARQ, covering topics from the UNGASS Outcome Document and the Sustainable Development Goals.

In response, the UNODC agreed to share the letter with the participants of an expert meeting on the ARQs held in January 2018 – although civil society representatives were not invited to attend the meeting. The UNODC also held an NGO briefing on the ARQ at the margins of the 61st session of the CND, at which various IDPC members and partners raised issues to be considered for a new ARQ. The IDPC network will continue to push for more meaningful civil society engagement in the ARQ review process going forward – in particular in light of the 2019 Ministerial Segment which will define the direction of global drug control for the next decade.

January 2018

Promoting the rights of women drug offenders at the UN in Geneva

In January 2018, IDPC and the Centro de Estudios Legales y Sociales (CELS, Argentina) were invited to the strategy meeting of the Working Group on the Prevention of Discriminations against Women in Practice and in the Law of the Office of the High Commissioner on Human Rights (OHCHR). As the membership of the Working Group had just been renewed, this meeting was a key opportunity to feed into the priorities of the Group for the next three years. IDPC and CELS – the only NGO speakers invited to present on a specific theme – discussed the discriminatory impact of drug policy and incarceration on women.

Recognising and addressing the vulnerabilities faced by women in drug policy – particularly their overincarceration for drug offences – is at the core of IDPC’s advocacy. In Latin America, the proportion of women imprisoned for drug offences is particularly high, sometimes reaching 75 to 80% of all women incarcerated. Those found in prison are low-level, non-violent, first time offenders, generally single mothers and heads of households in situation of vulnerability. Repressive drug policies have only served to exacerbate their poverty and marginalisation.

IDPC has collaborated closely with the Washington Office on Latin America, CELS and DeJusticia (Colombia), as well as a group of advocates, researchers and policy makers. Together, we embarked in a number of advocacy activities across Latin America, which have included the production of a Guide to policy makers with recommendations on gender-sensitive drug policy reforms, innovative examples of good practice, the production of photo essays to show the human face of the issue, and a number of meetings and dialogues with policy makers to share experiences and identify reform opportunities.

It was within that framework that we met with the OHCHR Working Group. We were delighted to hear, a few months after the strategy meeting, that the Working Group had decided to draft their next thematic report on ‘Women deprived of liberty’. We will continue to work with the Working Group to ensure that the issue of drug policy and women features within their priorities for the years to come.
The Forum allowed IDPC Members to engage in frank discussions about what could (and could not) be realistically achieved at the 2019 Ministerial Segment, and to map out the key advocacy messages and opportunities. The two-day meeting – held immediately following the Brandenburg Forum on Drug Policies and Development that is hosted by Germany, the Netherlands, TNI and IDPC – was a chance to reflect on the gains and frustrations from the 2016 UNGASS, to discuss the latest geo-political dynamics at the UN, and to brainstorm what ‘wins’ might look like in 2019. The event was characterised by one participant as ‘a key milestone for CSOs to strategize and share information’.

The Forum led to the publication of IDPC’s Asks for 2019 – a set of concrete expectations of member states from the IDPC network:

1. Move away from ‘drug-free world’ targets.
2. Meaningfully reflect the impacts of drug policies on health, human rights and development.
3. Reflect the realities of drug policies on the ground – the ‘elephants in the room’.
4. End punitive approaches and put people and communities first.

We are committed to continuing to find ways to bring together our network in these kinds of settings to allow for joint collaboration and strategizing which also foster solidarity across the diverse membership. The wealth of knowledge and experiences across the IDPC membership is an incredible collective asset, and we are always seeking to maximise our combined impact. Moving forward from the February 2018 meeting, IDPC has continued to monitor developments in Vienna through our CND Blog, and holds regular coordination teleconferences with key global partners to discuss the collective advocacy approaches.

With over 90 organisations and their 326 delegates in attendance, the Session provided an incredible opportunity for reform-minded organisations to collectively hone advocacy strategies for maximum effect. IDPC’s support in this regard is critical. Prior to the meeting, IDPC provided key resources, information and spaces to build the membership and allies’ capacity to navigate the forum. These included funding for two IDPC members from the Global South to attend the CND; a Global Civil Society Strategy Forum to discuss key priorities; a series of multilingual webinars, produced with the invaluable support of the membership; an introductory video to the CND’s functioning and avenues for engagement; and a preparatory Special Alert. On the eve of the meeting, IDPC also held its biggest-to-date pre-CND Orientation meeting.

During the Session itself, targeted Daily Digests kept members informed of upcoming opportunities, debates and key events (including 26 side events co-sponsored by IDPC’s Secretariat and membership). Regional and thematic meetings (Latin America, Asia, Support. Don’t Punish) helped members touch base, exchange experiences and plan further synergies. As ever, the CND Blog provided live updates of the proceedings, covering a record-breaking 52 events thanks to the invaluable collaboration of the network and allies. Finally, within the framework of GPDPD, the CND App was developed and deployed, facilitating navigation and engagement with the debates for over 400 users.

As IDPC’s Executive Director put it in her debrief blog: ‘This year it truly felt that the long-standing efforts to improve civil society engagement and visibility at the CND were starting to pay off. IDPC is proud of the undeniable contribution that our 177-strong membership has made toward this achievement.'

IDPC’s theory of change

IDPC’s vision is that national and international drug policies are grounded in the principles of human rights and human security, social inclusion, public health, development, and civil society engagement.

Vision
- UN Member States modernise drug control conventions, structures and practices to allow for a diversity of progressive national responses.
- Greater integration is achieved between the UN drug agencies and the rest of the UN system.

Long-term Outcomes
- Governments adopt progressive drug policies such as the decriminalisation of drug use, regulated markets for certain drugs, universal access to health and social services, and equitable rural development in areas of crop cultivation for the illicit drug market.

Intermediate Outcomes
- Member States agree on a process for modernisation of UN conventions.
- A critical mass of countries undertakes the implementation of national reforms.
- Key countries increase calls for system reform, and send the reliance on consensus within the CNN.

Short-term Outcomes
- Smaller jurisdictions pioneer reforms and build our understanding of the models and evidence.
- Opinion formers shift to favour reform (law enforcement, conservative media, etc.).

Strategic Priorities
- Build and maintain effective relationships with international and national level policy-makers to facilitate CSO advocacy efforts.
- Facilitate communication and cooperation between CSOs to support collaborations and promote media engagement.
- Provide tools and technical support to build the capacity of CSOs to better engage with policy making processes at all levels.
- Produce and disseminate high-quality research, reports and resources to inform drug policy advocacy and debates.

Note: “Progressive drug policies” cuts across all sectors: human rights, public health, social inclusion, human security and development — for all those affected by the drug market.
The International Drug Policy Consortium (IDPC) is a global network of NGOs that promotes objective and open debate on the effectiveness, direction and content of drug policies at national and international level, and supports evidence-based policies that are effective in reducing drug-related harms. IDPC members have a wide range of experience and expertise in the analysis of drug problems and policies, and contribute to national and international policy debates. IDPC offers specialist advice through the dissemination of written materials, presentations at conferences, meetings with key policy makers and study tours. IDPC also provides capacity building and advocacy training for civil society organisations.

This Progress Report provides monthly highlights to showcase some of the most exciting and impactful advocacy events and activities from the IDPC membership between April 2017 and March 2018.
